You should carefully read both the summons and complaint and immediately contact an attorney to obtain advice on how to protect yourself and your home. If you cannot afford to hire an attorney, you may qualify for free legal assistance through your local legal aid organization.

Under certain circumstances, the U.S. Bankruptcy Code may provide relief from foreclosure. If you qualify for such relief, filing a chapter 13 bankruptcy petition may stay a foreclosure proceeding and allow you to (i) construct a repayment plan that provides for payment of mortgage arrears over the life of the plan, while maintaining current mortgage payments as they become due, or (ii) propose mortgage modification mediation. Please note, however, that filing a bankruptcy petition for the sole purpose of staying a foreclosure, without a good faith intent to construct and fund a repayment plan, may result in sanctions.

The state encourages you to investigate all of your options in foreclosure, including contacting your lender about loss mitigation programs that may be available to you. There are also government agencies and non-profit organizations that provide educational resources, including tips on trying to negotiate with your lender during the foreclosure process.
